Housing Project Bid Sent East

With a low bid aggregating just under $1,000,000, a recommendation for award of the contract for construction of the County Housing Authority's second project was enroute to Washington today, with the award expected Oct. 18. The project is to be built in the Palos Verdes Hills, near Western avenue, and will be known as Harbor Hills.

Name of the low bidder and the exact amount would not be divulged at the Los Angeles office of the County Housing Authority, the explanation being that final approval was subject to approval of Washington officials of the Federal Housing Authority.

General plan of the Harbor Hills project is similar to that of the authority's initial Carmelita project, now under way in North Long Beach at a cost of $1,729,000. The Palos Verdes project has about 100 fewer housing units, however.

Improvement of Study Habits Sought in H. S.

Continuing a program of bettering the cause of education in the high school here that was launched three years ago, Principal Thomas Elson said this week that the next campaign being undertaken will concentrate on improvement of study habits for all students. Elson declared that the first objective, that of improvement in reading, has been successful.

"We outlined a campaign to make high school studies more beneficial to students in 1936," Elson said. "At that time we knew that education was not a 'give-all' on the part of teachers but rather was a cooperative effort that needed the help of the students themselves to get the most out of high school life. Reading habits were attacked first because, after all, children and adults both get most of their knowledge out of the printed material. Better reading was our first objective and I think we have inculcated a desire for more knowledge than is gained directly from classrooms in our students during the past two years."

"Now we are going to attempt the improvement of study habits. This will be the most important part of our three-year campaign. We hope to show students the right kind of consistent study means better grades and more interesting achievement in the classroom," Elson concluded.

Week's Building Totals $6,330

Permits for new building, totaling $6,330, were issued during the past week from the city engineer's office. The permits were issued to the following:

C. S. Bottsford, Hermosa Beach, for a garage apartment 24 by 32 feet in size, at 2158 Torrance boulevard, $3,000; Don Vorhis for a garage house at 3730 Spencer street, $300; Dave Jacobs for remodeling the front and show-room of his concrete block building at 1324 Cabrillo avenue, $200.

C. H. Quandt for a double frame garage at 3900 Newton street, Welteria, $100; C. Kayamoto for a gasoline pump and tank at his residence, 3763 Highway 101, $70; Sidney Chalacomb for three 550-gallon gasoline tanks at 20516 Hawthorne avenue, $160, and G. E. Kealey, 723 C Sartori avenue, for a five-room frame stucco house and connecting garage at 722 Acacia avenue (corner of Maricopa avenue), $2,500.

Changes Made In Sales Tax

Several important amendments to California's Retail Sales and Use Tax Acts, made by the 1939 legislature and of vital importance to many Southern California merchants and business men, are now in effect.

Perhaps the most important amendment is that requiring all sellers of tangible personal property, including wholesalers, to obtain sellers' personal permits. The only exemption applies to those whose sales are restricted exclusively to property exempt from the sales and use taxes. Farmers selling food products are not required to obtain permits.

This amendment is necessary in order to give the board opportunity to determine if sales are wholesale or not and if resale certificates filed with the board are properly applicable.

Another amendment provides that the sales tax now applies to caterers. Through an accident of language they were excluded from the act when food products were made exempt. Under the amendment they are required to pay the tax on the same basis as restaurants and cafes.
